Slow-Living

More than outdoor cooking

Our story

THE ORIGIN OF ROOSTR

At Roostr, we believe that cooking outdoors is about far more than just preparing a meal. It's a moment of connection. It's about being together with family and friends, the fresh air and the good life. Our philosophy is simple: Outside Tastes Better.

We stand for creating those unique moments, without having to compromise on comfort or design. A Roostr outdoor kitchen is not merely a piece of furniture in the garden; it is the social heart of outdoor living where memories are made.

“For us, cooking outdoors is more than a meal – it's a moment of being together. That's what drives Roostr.”

The Roostr adventure began in 2020, born out of a personal passion and a frustration. Founder Liam van der Linden, a keen BBQ enthusiast, kept running into the same problem: a lack of workspace and storage made cooking outdoors messy and impractical.

What started as a personal challenge to solve this grew into a mission. The goal? To develop an outdoor kitchen that combines the practical convenience of an indoor kitchen with the robust aesthetics of the outdoors. The result was the Roostr Rubix: a modular kitchen that is functional, weatherproof and a feast for the eyes.

We want cooking outdoors to become truly unforgettable, not only with your loved ones but also through the space in which you work. Too often the experience is hindered by practical inconveniences. That's why we design solutions that seamlessly bring together aesthetics and functionality.

We innovate continuously, from our first Rubix to the newest models such as the Wave and Allure, to suit every garden style and cooking wish. We do this because we believe your garden should be an extension of your home, where you can work with the same luxury and ease as in your indoor kitchen.

THE ROOSTR MODELS

The ultimate outdoor experience, 365 days a year. For us, cooking is more than just preparing food; it is a social moment. With Rostr, you no longer stand alone in the kitchen or behind the BBQ while your family or friends are somewhere else. You stand right in the middle of the conviviality, together with your loved ones.

While the meat is grilling on the BBQ or the pizza oven is heating up, you have good conversations and enjoy a good glass of wine with your family or friends. Thanks to the workspace and smart storage of the outdoor kitchen, you prepare every dish entirely in the garden. No more walking back and forth, just pure focus on what matters: creating unforgettable moments in the fresh air.

Whether you choose the modular Rubix, the refined Allure or the organic Wave: with Rostr, your garden becomes the culinary and social heart of your home all year round. Experience the magic of outdoor cooking with a Rostr outdoor kitchen.

WORKTOPS, CABINET COLOURS AND INSPIRATION

The finish determines the ultimate look and feel of your dream kitchen. That's why we offer a rich palette of high-quality materials. Discover our various stylish cabinet colours, ranging from subtle light tones to bold dark shades. Which you can combine with our extensive range of luxury, scratch-resistant worktops.

Whether you're looking for a concrete finish, a refined marble structure, or a warm earthy tone, you're guaranteed to find the perfect combination here. Play with the various colours and textures and create an outdoor kitchen that is truly one hundred percent you.

Worktops

Choose pure luxury with worktops from Dekton and Florim. The worktops are fully scratch-resistant, stain-resistant, UV-resistant and heat-resistant up to 250 degrees.

Powder coating

Thanks to our special three-layer powder coating, you enjoy an outdoor kitchen in top condition, regardless of the weather. Each frame is carefully hand-finished for maximum protection.

Stainless steel cabinets

We use only high-quality stainless steel so that rust formation stands absolutely no chance in combination with the three-layer powder coating. A durable investment for years of outdoor cooking enjoyment.

Quality

THE BEST MATERIALS

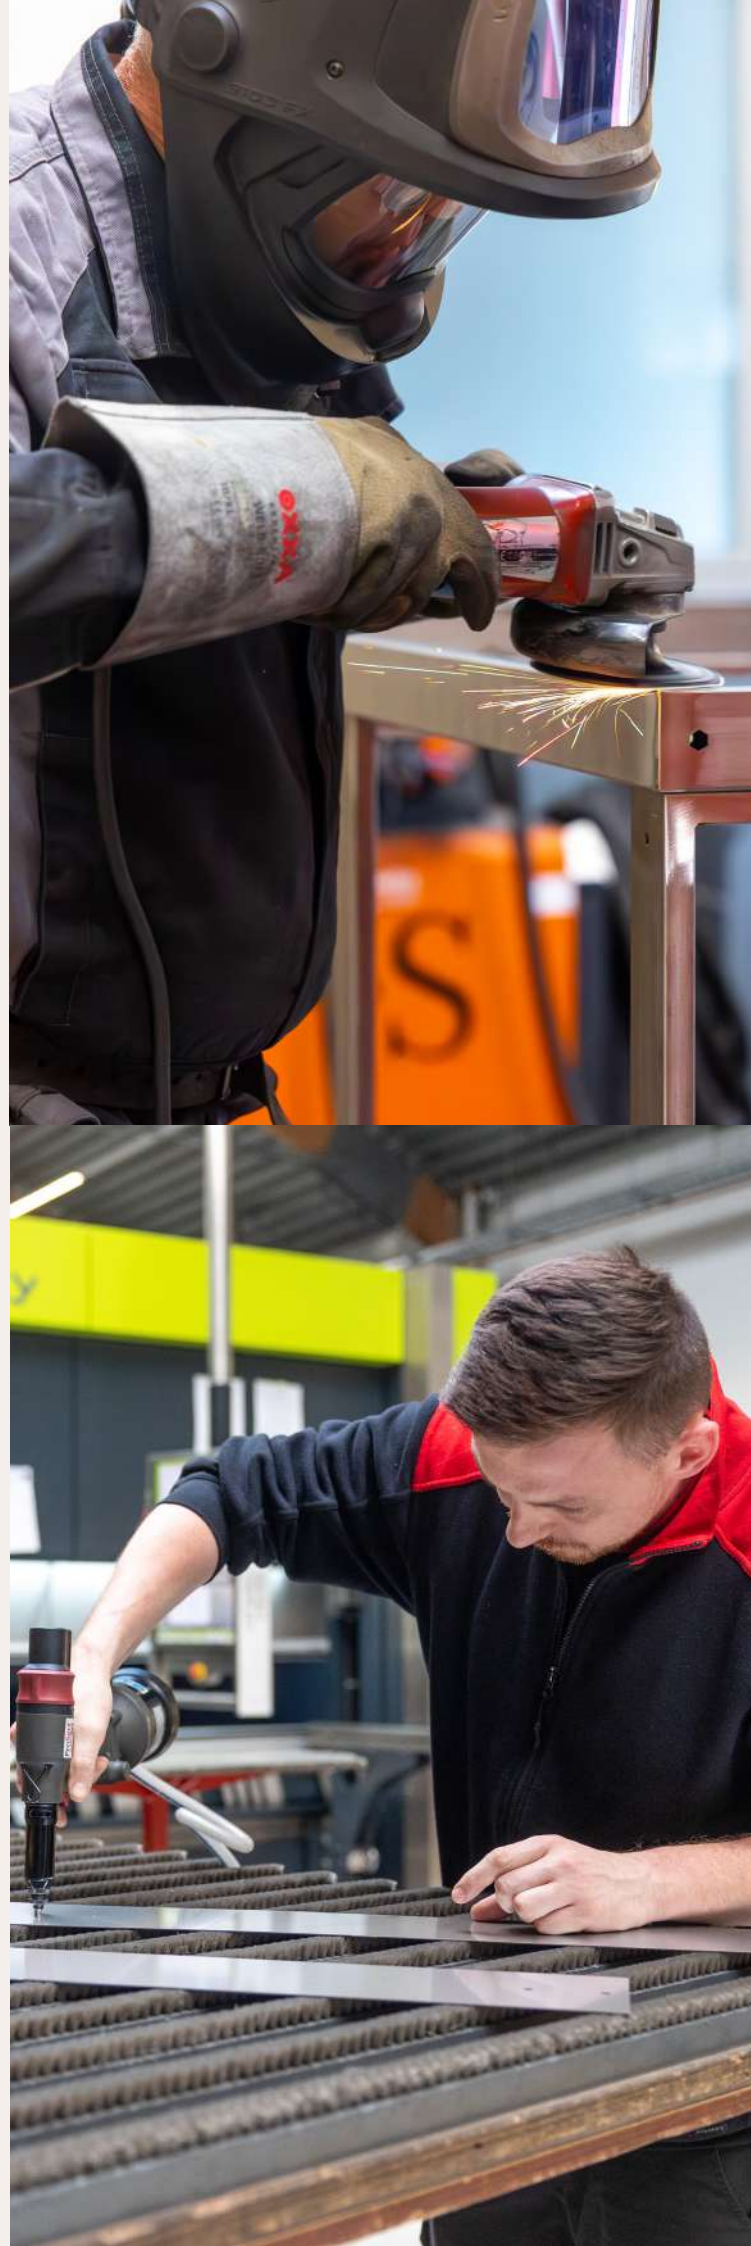

A Roostr outdoor kitchen doesn't just come together; it is built in our factory in the Netherlands. The basis of every module is extra-strong, high-quality stainless steel. This is where the craftsmanship begins: our welders shape the module with precision into an indestructible frame.

To ensure your kitchen can withstand weather, wind, rain, sun and use, the steel receives a protective treatment. We work with a three-layer powder coating and galvanised steel, so rust doesn't stand a chance. It is this robust foundation that allows us to offer a years-long warranty.

But strength is nothing without style. For the finishing touch, we look abroad: we source our ceramic and Dekton worktops directly from Italy. It's the perfect mix of Dutch quality and Southern European elegance.

Finally, our own Roostr installers get to work. They assemble the kitchen by hand and make sure everything is spot on. Built for now and the future. This way, we guarantee not just an outdoor kitchen for one season, but years of enjoyment every season in your own garden.

"Did you know... every Roostr outdoor kitchen is carefully designed and produced fully CO₂-neutral in the Netherlands? We offset our emissions so you can enjoy your Roostr with complete peace of mind."

Every component matters

An outdoor kitchen is not a purchase for one season; it is an investment meant to last for years. That starts with the choice of materials. At Roostr, we make sure every component withstands rain, frost, heat and moisture. From the worktop to the smallest screws. We make no compromises there.

Because it's precisely that one component that isn't weatherproof that causes problems down the line.

The core of every Roostr outdoor kitchen is stainless steel. This material does not rust and is therefore perfectly suited for intensive outdoor use. We finish it with a three-layer powder coating that provides extra protection while also giving the colour and look that suits your outdoor space.

Other materials?

What happens if you choose other materials for your outdoor kitchen? You'll notice this sooner than you might expect. With outdoor kitchens made of wood, for example, the construction will start to move: doors that no longer open or close, mould growth, wood rot and discolouration. In the worst case, planks break and the structure becomes unstable. That can actually become dangerous, especially if you're working with a kamado, gas barbecue or open fire.

With materials not specifically designed for outdoor use, you see rust formation, discolouration and accelerated wear. The difference between an outdoor kitchen that looks worn out after two years and one that still looks like new after twenty years? That comes down entirely to the choice of materials.

Slow-living

MORE THAN OUTDOOR COOKING

In a world where everything seems to move faster and faster and where we are constantly switched on, we all look for moments of slowing down. We call these moments slow living. It is a conscious choice to leave the hustle and bustle of everyday life behind for a while and return to what matters most. Although an outdoor kitchen is often seen as a place to eat, the concept is for us much broader than that. It is a philosophy centred on quality over quantity and on being present in the here and now. An outdoor kitchen thereby acts as the central, social point in the garden for you and your loved ones.

“Outdoor living is the art of slowing down and finding the space for what truly matters”

Preparing a meal in the open air takes the edge off a busy workday. You're no longer occupied with deadlines or digital stimuli but focused on preparing dishes, keeping an eye on the fire and paying attention to your surroundings.

Cooking outdoors becomes a shared experience. A natural social spot forms around the outdoor kitchen. It's about the connection with the people around you, whether that's your family or a group of good friends. You are outside together and share the time while the food is being prepared. It is precisely those moments of undivided attention that have become enormously valuable in our society today.

We believe that an outdoor kitchen is the key to spending more time outdoors, having time to relax and making time for one another, allowing you to more often benefit from the fresh air and peace of your own garden. It is the place where you take back control of your own pace. Whether you're alone enjoying the silence or spending time together late into the evening at a set table, it's all about the experience.

We're happy to help you create that space where slow living is no longer an abstract concept, but possible whenever you want it to be.

Because ultimately, slow living is far more than just a way of cooking outdoors.
